Beads of sweat roll down the grimacing face of the determined climber despite the cool of the early summer morning. Reaching up to a solid-looking crevice, she loses her grip and plummets several feet before her lifeline jolts her to an abrupt halt. Rather startled, but still determined, she catches her breath and begins the ascent once more. Welcome to the real world, where the only ground you have to walk on is your faith.

forming "Whatta Man."

Woodstock, the original, had a purpose: make a stand. Nathan McMichael agreed. "Part one meant more; it was a better trip." This movement for peace and love inspired many people; they became one through music. Carlos Santana said, "Sound brings us together and heals us."

Woodstock II can never compare to its predecessor. Many enjoyed the shows, but there will never be a motivational movement like the original Woodstock.

The screech of guitars and the beat of drums sounded above the roar of the crowd on that hot, humid August day. The scent of smoke and sweaty people filled the air. Welcome to Woodstock II... is this what the first Woodstock was really about?

Woodstock II was to be Woodstock relived; instead, it was a commercial event. When describing the original Woodstock, Crosby, Stills and Nash said, "There was an energy that was unbelievable. We knew something very special was going on." This emotion was missing at Woodstock II. There was a great difference between Jimi Hendrix playing a show-stopping "Star Spangled Banner" and Salt-N-Pepa per-

The past year in sports has brought both smiles and tears to the onlookers of the world. Sport fans were delighted by new experiences, but at the same time other expectations were cut short.

This year was an exciting whirlwind of transitions and encores. Basketball great Michael Jordan, who immortalized his number 23 jersey with the Chicago Bulls, switched to baseball with the Chicago White Sox farm league team. Martina Navratilova retired after twenty years of breathtaking tennis. Like Jordan, her aggressive yet graceful skill amazed many sports fans. Japanese baseball became popular to fill the void of yet another Major League Baseball strike, and soccer's World Cup finally came to the United States with Team USA advancing to the second round for the first time.

With an inspirational encore, George Foreman became the first boxer over the age of forty to recapture the championship belt by knocking out Michael Moorer. The New York Rangers defeated the Vancouver Canucks to win the Stanley Cup for the first time in fifty-six years. The Houston Rockets led by MVP Hakeem Olajuwon beat the New York Knicks to win the World Championship again, and Brazil conquered Italy to win the World Cup for the fourth time. For all avid sports followers, this year proved to be very noteworthy and exciting.

The wafting heat of the August afternoon saturates the mountain air. A lone hiker blazes a trail into the unknown with only her skills and resourcefulness to protect her. Despite periods of exhaustion and fatigue, she perseveres. Conquering the rugged terrain and fighting the uphill battle provide her escape from the demands of society. The ups and downs of life socially, physically, and mentally can only be overcome by the will to survive and the chutzpah to make it happen.

Standing ovation
Scoring another touch-down, the football team brings its loyal fans to their feet. Games provided a great opportunity for parents and friends of the school to show their abundant support.

Unity. It brought you into the world.
In the midst of great catastrophes, it pulls communities together. It even earned our nation its freedom. Unity loosens the bonds of ignorance and fear, and draws mankind together as a people.

When the bodies of almost 400 meek, yet eager freshmen converged on campus four long years ago, no one expected the many changes or amount of growth they would experience. The new faces and opportunities they encountered, though strange and foreboding at first,
quickly became a familiar and accepted part of their lives.

Throughout their second and third years on campus they became a close, cohesive group. As they accepted their diplomas and looked out into the crowded audience, they realized they'd crossed the threshold of adulthood. Reflecting on their high school years, they realized they would always have close bonds. People who learned together, laughed together, cried together, and grew together can never be torn apart.

COMMON GROUND

Spirit abounds

School spirit takes on a western flavor

Feeling very uneasy, a new student nervously wanders down the hallway looking for her next class. Deciding to ask for directions, she turns, only to find that she is surrounded by swarms of people dressed in cowboy boots, hats, and other frontier apparel. Even though it appears to be the Roy Rogers' School of Rodeo, it is actually our school amidst the celebration of Homecoming Week.

During the SCA-sponsored Spirit Week, everyone had the opportunity to express creativity and true appreciation for the school. Each day was assigned a special theme, like college sweatshirt day, western day, hat day, concert t-shirt day, and school colors day. Students had fun showing off hats and sweatshirts that they might not ordinarily wear to school. "Spirit Week gave me the opportunity to wear my Russian hat," said junior Russell Fox. Friday brought the anticipated Homecoming football game which included club Homecoming floats parading around the track at half time.

The traditional Homecoming dance ended the week and provided an opportunity for students to dress up in their finest threads and dance to the music of F.Y.D.(Fine Young Deejays.) and other great musicians. Sophomore Anika McMichael said, "Even though I enjoy the football and Spirit Week festivities, the dance is always my favorite event." Once again Homecoming Week proved to be a magnificent and enjoyable display of Knight pride.

Reaching for the gold In coordination with the Homecoming theme "Western Knights," Team Yearbook's "Gold Rush" float is guided by senior Sarah Gregory, junior Amanda Jarratt, and freshmen Travis Grodski and Shelly Fink. Many clubs participated in the parade, but Team Yearbook broke the French Club's record as reigning winners.

Some enchanted evening As the Homecoming Dance began, Queen Nicky Seymore and King T. J. Stickel begin with the traditional King and Queen Dance. Students enjoyed the dance as an opportunity to get together with friends outside of school.

The crowd was in a frenzy when the halftime parade began. As the colorful golf cart floats proceeded around the track, the crowd cheered. The sights and sounds of the festivities brought a smiles to the faces in the crowd.

The Homecoming parade was organized by the S.C.A. Clubs in the parade created floats that captured the homecoming theme,

"Western Knights." Keyette member Anne Perkins said, "It took a lot of work after school, but with a lot of help from the club members, it was worth it."

The parade displayed the ingenuity present in our school. The most creative float was Team Yearbook's, which took first prize, but the crazy driving of all participants caused the most laughs. There was a three cart pile up that created a humorous finale to the parade. Cameron Sweet of the Key club said, "It was crazy; nobody could drive straight."

From

SADD to the Latin club, involvement in the parade boosted school spirit. Senior Troy Golden summed it up, by saying, "The parade was so much fun; I wish I wasn't graduating."

Thespians enjoy the thrill of the spotlight

As the house lights dim and the audience grows quiet, the only sound is the shuffling of programs. All eyes focus on center stage as the curtain opens and music begins to play. A clean, crisp sound echoes through the theatre. Another show has begun. Welcome to the drama department, a tightly knit organization with talent, determination, and just a touch of nervousness.

Actors and actresses worked relentlessly for many weeks on each show produced. During that time, the drama students spent long evenings rehearsing to bring quality entertainment to many audiences. Obviously, after all that hard work, actors and actresses grew nervous during performances of a show. "The nervousness is beneficial; it shows that you care about your performance and generates a good type of energy on stage," said drama coordinator, Charmaine Sanders.

While attending many hours of rehearsal, the drama students also balanced schoolwork and job stress. "Shows are always stressful toward the end because of all the homework and my job on top of heavy rehearsals," explained senior Johnny Christensen.

The drama program also involved tremendous amounts of self-motivation for memorizing lines, blocking, and dances. "It's always hard to coordinate everything; it takes a lot of synchronization," commented junior Caron Johnson.

Although the drama team was stressed, they worked through incredible odds to produce exciting productions like The Crucible and The Wiz. These actors and actresses are a special type of people who can balance both talent and life to provide outstanding entertainment.

Mean 'Ole Lion Letting out a ferocious growl, senior Johnny Christensen finds a bit of courage. The part of the lion provided a comedic flair in the show that kept the audience laughing.

Don't lose the feeling Smiling sweetly at her "niece", senior Crystal Montgomery sings an inspirational song to junior Tohry Petty. The beautiful music in the show contributed greatly to the success of the production.

Home... Pleading for strength, freshman Ranna Lannagan charges the audience with her final emotion-packed solo. Ranna became an example of the talent that will continue to be developed in the drama program.

Faithful persistence Poring over an old volume, juniors Paul Boshears, Eric Lee, Josh Parks, Chris Malgee and Sarah Lyons seek a cure to bizarre happenings in Salem. The Crucible centered upon good and evil in the world.

Dire testimony Interrogating junior Debbie Layman, senior Johnny Christenson shouts in anger. Thrilling scenes such as these gave the production of The Crucible and emotional yet wonderful reputation.

Grand finale Concentrating intently on the director's instructions, senior Elizabeth Miller performs the final song of the orchestra's winter concert. Throughout the year, the orchestra graced the stage with works by great musicians such as Mozart, Bach, and Tchaikovsky.

Curtain call Singing in harmony during an audition for The Wiz, Kristen Stewart, Phynise Boisseau, and Crystal Montgomery try out for a part in the play. Many students demonstrated excellent talent while performing in school productions.

A little pause Waiting patiently for his part, senior Brian Hagan reviews the music. The orchestra presented several concerts throughout the year that provided students with exposure to various types of music.

Music is the essence of harmony. It bonds the soul of thousands to the same beat. It enlivens the mind, relaxes the body, and redeems the heart. Brian Hagan, a senior in the orchestra, put it well when he stated,

Music isn't an object, it's a coalition of emotions that well in your soul and come about through determination and persistence. Only with teamwork can an orchestra perform at our level.

Junior Allison Harding, member of the Marching Band, said, It's a lot of hard work, but if you love it, it doesn't matter. It's a chance to get together with a lot of your friends and just have fun. This year the marching band traveled to Florida to play in a parade. Other trips and competitions were exciting for the Symphonic Band, the choruses, and the Jazz Pizzazz Show Choir. When asked about performing on stage, senior Johnny Christiansen stated, It's an adrenaline explosion.

A new class was created this year which gave students an opportunity to compose their own pieces. Band director Steve Turner explained, [it is] a class on how music is constructed, and the mechanics of music rather than the performance.

Regardless of the curriculum or class, music performance provides a needed outlet for stress and created a common bond amongst students. How better can one join the hands of a nation than to plant a united melody from within?

Students experience pre-show stress

Lights flash, music pounds and adrenaline pumps as all the eyes in the room follow your every step. Just as you enter the stage, your heel gets caught in a hole, and snickers echo from the walls. Can this really be happening? Stress runs high as, one by one, fashion students walk the catwalk in front of the entire school.

Confidence and talent were needed to step out in the limelight. "Fashion is stressful because you don't know if you'll be booed. It's really a popularity contest," stated senior Marcus Hathorn.

Students in the program learned how to present themselves in a business setting in addition to showing off their fashion savvy. Despite the professional attitudes of the students in the program, the production of such a show was still demanding on the sponsor, Mrs. Cheryl Montijo. "The program has grown to twice the size of previous years. There's also a lot more to coordinate, and it's important to make sure everything's in order," she said. Though the stress and tension of such a show was very high, the rewards of the production were enjoyed by the participants, and the stellar performance was appreciated immensely by the audience.

Dancing to a different tune

Amazing the audience with an Indian dance, junior Lena Patel expresses her dancing flair. The six finalists in the talent competition thrilled the spectators with memorable performances.

The crowning moment Smiling through tears of joy, sophomore Brandy Nelson walks the runway after being crowned Miss Thomas Dale 1995. Brandy's theatrical mime was a highlight of the evening.

Waiting in the wings, you watch as everyone around you nervously paces the floor. A horrible feeling comes to your stomach as you realize that your turn is next. Hearing your name announced, you walk out before the excited crowd, praying that your legs won't give out, your heels don't make you seem unbalanced, and your dress is zipped. A smile masks your fear as you pause to answer an unknown question that will determine your fate.

Participating in the Mr. and Miss Thomas Dale Pageant required the cooperation and dedication of all contestants as they prepared individual and group performances. Performing a talent, answering a spontaneous question, and participating in a group dance in front of peers took a lot of courage and poise. Luckily, the contestants ignored any apprehensive feelings and just had lots of fun. As Miss Thomas Dale 1995, sophomore Brandy Nelson exclaimed that "the best part of the pageant was the practices. During the practices, we just goofed off and had a good time."

In addition to the eleven female contestants, the pageant was highlighted by three guys who had a great time impersonating their favorite female performers. Senior Jonathan Dean said, "It was a lot of fun for the seniors that were in it. We went out with a bang!!!"

Prom Personalities

By Andrea Brandenberger

Students express their individualism

From cowboy boots, to hats, to Birkenstocks, prom definitely had variety. People expressed their personalities in ways that left lasting impressions.

Many applauded the show of individual styles, yet there were few who thought it was improper since it was a formal event. Senior Bethni Hannon stated, "I feel prom should be tradition and that our own dress preferences should not be displayed."

But picking out your own dress or tuxedo is your own style. Junior Meghan McNicholas said, "Tastes vary. I'm sure some liked it and some didn't, but I don't dress for other people, I dress for me."

Many may ask what influenced these extravagant students to express their uniqueness. Some said because it was cool; others, because they thought it would be fun.

Here are some of the stylish markings of this year's prom: senior Billy Coppit, tie-dye socks and Birkenstocks; '93 TD graduate Chris Runyon, a western tuxedo, cowboy boots and hat; junior Meghan McNicholas, a wedding gown and green galoshes;

senior Johnny Christensen, the classic top hat and cane; and senior Andy Shrock, a golfer's hat.

The prom itself was beautifully decorated with black and white, with red accents for the style of a Knight in New York! The highlight of the evening, besides the crowning of the king and queen, was the massive train on the dance floor during the song, "Baby Likes to Rock It," by the Tractors. Prom-goers joined hands and pulled and danced around the floor and through the Officer Club's halls. This was only a small example of the explosive dancing that occurred.

Prom was a big success, but there were some who expressed minor regrets like senior Andy Shrock who said, "Shoulda worn the Pumas!"

Royal embrace Enjoying the limelight, Queen Sarah Hague and King Jonathan Dean congratulate each other. The honor of Prom Court was a long awaited activity that put a final touch on the magnificent evening.

Tasty treats Preparing to have hors d'oeuvres, seniors Sarah Gregory and Mariano Scian share a friendly embrace before heading toward the buffet tables. Many prom-goers enjoyed the tasty and unique food available.

In the swing of things Taking a break from the action seniors Laurie Thompson, Heather Marshall, and Sharon Bhuller relax on the swings. Picnic goers enjoyed such activities which were reminiscent of their childhoods.

Taking the plunge Diving into the pool, senior Megan Dameron takes an opportunity to cool off. Seniors relished the poolside picnic on such a hot June afternoon.

Upon entering the Chester pool, you see girls in bikinis lying beside the pool, and muscular guys showing their chests playing on the courts. The immediate thought that runs through your mind: "O...yeah!" The food from King's Korner smells wonderful, and you can't wait to join the festivities on a beautiful day for the Senior Picnic.

The seniors had a choice of where they wanted the picnic: either the Chester pool or the football field. Though the tally was close, students chose to picnic at the pool. Senior Lesa Martin said, "I kind of felt that the picnic should have been on the field because all of the other traditions are being broken this year, but I had a great time anyway." Students had mixed feelings about the change, but everyone had a great time.

There was a lot of diversity in the styles of suits worn. After casually looking around, senior Celena Smith exclaimed, "You can really tell how a person is by what she's wearing!" Everyone's personality was definitely reflected by their suits. Most didn't mind wearing less than daddy would have liked, but no one seemed to mind the differences in style.

All in all, the picnic was a complete success, and everyone involved enjoyed themselves. Most of the seniors tried to soak a teacher by jumping in beside him or her. Senior Jonathan Dean happily exclaimed, "No one got to actually dunk Mr. Storino, but Bethni [Hannon] and I took the opportunity to splash him really good! He thought he was being careful... but we all know that I can outsmart him!"

As the wet, tired, and tanned seniors left the recreation area, they looked back to capture one last glimpse of high school and store it in their memories. Many could not believe that their senior year was almost over. Senior Beth Barnes finalized it when she stated, "The picnic made me realize how close graduation is. I know I'll be in tears that day because I am already missing my past. It's all becoming just a memory."

A Night to Remember

By Wendy Daniel

Seniors enjoy their final celebration

The sounds of the anxious crowd echo through the corridors as the milling group of seniors line up in alphabetical order. Waiting patiently at the entrance to the Coliseum, they listen as the first bars of Pomp and Circumstance are played. With their heads held high, they proceed into the arena; four long years of hard work have finally come to an exhilarating climax.

This rush of pride and accomplishment was felt by many in the graduating class on their special day. "I can't believe we've finally made it!" exclaimed senior Tonya Harris. With all of the work behind them, seniors concentrated on having fun.

After the ceremony, many seniors had different plans to celebrate the night away. Many held parties for family and friends, but the most popular was the all night boat trip on the Annabel

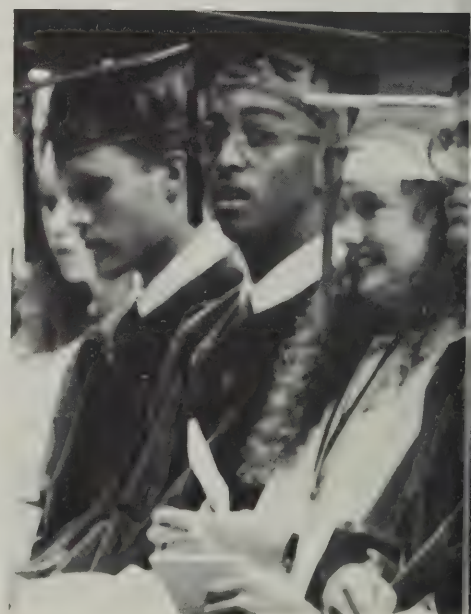

Lee. Senior parents planned all year to create a party where seniors could go and have fun without the dangers of alcohol and drugs. "The goal of the trip was to keep kids off the road on graduation night. If we saved just one life that night, all of the time, effort, and expense will be well worth it," stated chairperson Rodney Green.

Those who attended the party enjoyed great food, music, photo and caricature opportunities, and especially the blackjack tables where they could gamble with play money all night long. "It was a lot of fun," commented senior Donnie Barfield who won in excess of 80,000 dollars that night at the blackjack tables, "but I don't quite think I'm ready for Atlantic City; it's much harder to gamble 4,000 dollars at a time when you know it's real!"

Final words Listening thoughtfully, Kelly Jacobs contemplates the speaker's words. Seniors felt eager about the future and nostalgic about the past as they listened to commencement speeches.

The moment we've been waiting for... Jason Hill, Summer Hinkle, and April Hurt listen eagerly to the speaker, while Gregg Ingram and Monica Inzaina celebrate their final moments as high school students.

Congratulations! Number one in the class, Megan Dameron is awarded the J. Wilson Crump Scholarship by Superintendent Thomas Fulgum. Megan earned this honor for her achievements throughout high school.

Celebrate! After their own speeches, senior class president Jonathan Dean and honor graduates Mandy Monroe, Ben Armstrong, Laurie Thompson, and Megan Dameron listen as Principal Aubrey Lindsey advises the Class of '95 to celebrate their accomplishments.

Pomp and Circumstance With mixed emotions seniors take their final walk as Thomas Dale students. Smiles and tears were seen as the Class of '95 assembled for the last time.

Over the Edge

The warm sun shines down on the golden valley as the cool September wind whips across the sharp crags of the weather-worn mountain face. Surveying the endless sky like an eagle searching for prey, the rugged adventurer prepares himself for the challenge. Claspings the bars with white knuckles, the hang glider sprints to the edge, his muscles exploding into one sharp motion that sends him skyward. Feelings of freedom engulf him as he realizes his accomplishment. The truth is, you can always push harder. And hey, the truth works.

Over the Top Having accurately pre-judged the height of the bar, senior Jonathan Dean polevaults over the edge with finesse. The hard work and dedication of the school's numerous athletes led to countless victories throughout the year.

We practiced underneath the heat of the sun daily. When the season began, the team looked sharp. We were more like brothers than teammates. Our first game was away. We came home smiling, but the next week of practice had a few too many smiles. "How you practice is how you play!" was shouted by the coaches constantly. That Friday evening, we proved the coaches right. When the week of the playoffs came, we practiced with more pride, desire, and hunger than ever before. Sadly, the night before the game, we were informed that we had been disqualified. Rouven Rohde, an exchange student from Germany, was said to be an ineligible player, yet he was a part of our team. "I feel sorry for them (Prince George)," said Rouven, who was nicknamed "Groove" by his caring teammates. We had our ups and downs throughout our season, but we deserved to go to playoffs. We were robbed of what was ours. Even though the books did not list us as the 1994 Central District Champions, we knew we were the true owners of the title. Senior Jason Little spoke for us all when he cried, "That's just not fair; they can't take that away from us."

Cheerleaders were not ditzzy airheads, as they were often stereotyped. Many times they were overlooked and unappreciated. "We may not score the winning touchdown or shoot a three-pointer at the last second, but we're there every step of the way to support our teams," said sophomore Jamie English. They even cheered in thirty-degree weather wearing short uniforms.

"Cheerleading was very difficult during the bitter, cold weather. Our skirts can't keep the cold out of a heat wave," said sophomore Jennifer English.

Because there was only one squad, they cheered for junior varsity games as well. The entire squad painted signs and organized programs. Sophomores and freshmen worked twenty hour weeks and juniors and seniors worked thirty-five.

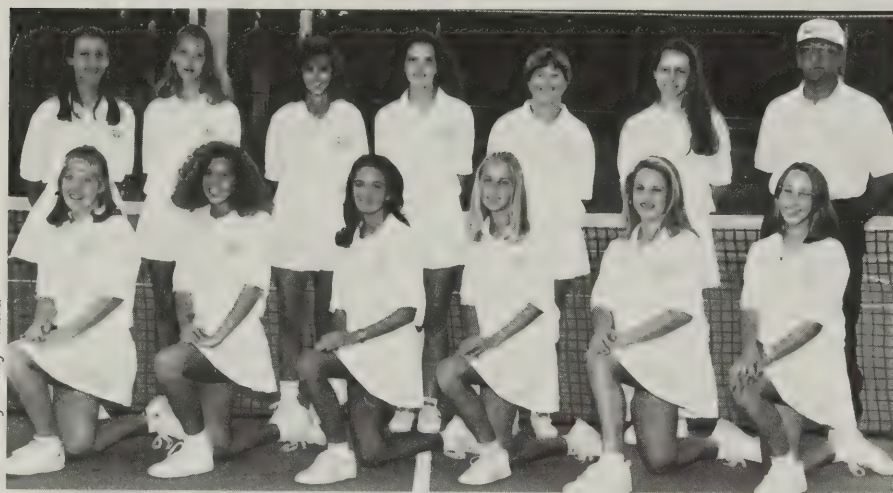

Cheerleading took much hard work and dedication. "Cheerleading takes a lot of time. We start in the middle of July so we can get ready for camp at N.C. State, and in August we practice three times a week for two hours," said junior Dawn Shell. Cheerleading has become more demanding of time, skill and talent, as the sport has become more competitive.

season. The enthusiasm of the younger players was commendable, and the strength of the upper-classmen was particularly impressive. Freshman Ellen Bruce commented that she felt like a contributing factor of the team despite the fact that she was a freshman. She stated that tennis was a lot of fun. Sophomore Nancy Canoles, also earned a valuable place on the team as a morale booster. When questioned about her uniform, Nancy said, I got really tired of explaining to people that I was a tennis player and not a cheerleader! The aim of the golf team was to rebuild and work with the younger guys. Rebuilding is a long process, but the team hung tough through a struggling season.

The Knights did not have high expectations when the season started, but once the district tournament came around the team was fired up. Where they lacked experience, they compensated with a great sense of camaraderie. A regional qualifier and one of the team leaders, Kenny Lamborn said, "We lacked the talent that Junior Chris Melher and Senior Troy Golden backed up the team leaders Kenny Lamborn, John Free, and Jimmy Starke with their "humorous relationships" with each other. "I learned a lot this year and hopefully my experience will carry over into next season," said junior Chris Melher.

The golf team had its ups and downs. Senior Jason Duncan summed up the season best by saying, "We competed strongly with other teams, but the experience gained by the younger guys was satisfying enough." It was an overall productive year for the golf team. They showed strong leadership and maturity throughout their rebuilding season.

All in all, everyone had an enjoyable season. Senior Jenny Gray said, "Nothing can sum up our season better than remembering the incident with Jessica's glasses. Sorry! Plagued by everything from sprained ankles to feet in the net, the team learned a lot including the fact that there was no I in team. Senior Amy Wrenn exclaimed, This year, we really became a team . . . Reading our Chicken Soup, and chanting L-7 . . . weenie! helped us to become one and not play as individuals. The Marching Knights attended many practices, fighting the heat of August and the chill of November to perfect their positions, movement, and music on the field. It's really amazing to see the group come together as one throughout the course of the season, said junior Sarah Puhala.

Again, this year's Marching Band acquired many awards and honors for their hard work and dedication. Marching Band is so much fun because it's like one big family striving toward one goal, and helping each other to achieve that goal of success, said junior Celeste Buccola.

The Marching Band looks forward to another incredible season, knowing that dedication and a lot of talent will take them far.

Dashing over hills and running through streams in one-hundred dollar shoes, the Cross Country Team continued the excellent tradition of winning. If there was ever a theme to cross country this would be it.

With class and pizzazz, Coach Bob Gulley led the team to their fourth consecutive Central District title. This year's team included powerful underclassmen like sophomore Matt Taylor and junior Andy Crowder who both went to the State Championship, and key senior runner Trey Taylor.

times had changed. Led by Ricky Hall in scoring, the Knights showed real potential by making it to Regionals for the first time in nineteen years. Captains Josh Green, Jobette Upshaw, and Mario Thompson brought leadership to the team, while Joe Waller, Lamar Thompson and Ben Armstrong gave power. They played in the toughest district in the state with powerhouses such as Petersburg, Hopewell, and state champs Meadowbrook. Captain Mario Thompson said, "With each game the team is showing progress, the same kind of progress that will get us to Regionals."

"When we played together, there was nobody that could stop us. "Oh yeah, remember... Showtime!" exclaimed senior Ricky Hall.

Fighting to win. Getting into the basket with strong determination. Senior Lamar Thompson becomes a powerful rebounder for the team. All of the underclassmen made important contributions to the team.

"We had an outstanding season this year, and I am proud of every one of my players. All of the guys were great, and we had a good time working as a team."

As the timer buzzes for time out and the basketball players head off the court, the cheerleaders prepare to pep up the crowd. Flipping, jumping, and screaming, they run onto the court and perform a routine which contains exciting stunts and, of course, cheers to raise the spirit of the crowd for the next play.

The cheerleaders this year were a major asset to the crowd participation at many of the boys' basketball games. Throughout the games the cheerleaders would try their hardest to pump up the crowd for the game. Sophomore Jennifer English commented, "It's a lot of fun when the score is close or even tied because you try your hardest to keep the crowd into the game and it feels like you're a part of the team."

The cheerleaders would conduct cheers under the basketball hoop on the bleachers during the game. From this position they would try to distract the other team by yelling and stomping when they had foul shots. Sophomore Amy Paitzel said, "The games are very emotional, and you can feel the pressure of the games."

The players enjoyed the cheers, and it made them feel ready to play the game. The basketball cheerleaders encouraged the team throughout the season. Basketball team captain senior Jobette Upshaw commented, "The cheerleaders were a help to the crowd and an inspiration to the team."

really successful. With hard work and precise teamwork, we will be in regionals." Providing offensive power, Fulcher, senior Jason Cooper, and junior Nathaniel Ball-Coates scored many goals for the Knights. The defense, lead by senior captain, Ben Armstrong, and junior Nikki Walker, provided a strong back bone for the team. Senior Donnie Barfield provided experience as goalkeeper. Another asset of the team was the aggressive ball controlling midfield of seniors Jason Duncan and Josh Green, junior Chris Mehler, and sophomore Chris Termini. Pride was the driving force of the players throughout the season. Captain Jason Duncan said, "This year's team is great. We have the potential to beat any team; with the right commitment and dedication we can go further than any Knight team."

Power play Giving the ball a power-packed kick, junior Peter Anderson blasts it past a defender from the opposing team. Anderson's defensive skills were a vital part of the team's ability to keep other teams from scoring.

"We hung in there. We had a good season. We had a lot of potential that did not go to waste which allowed us to qualify for regionals."

The great American pastime almost became the lost American pastime as fans became disgusted by the greed and inflexibility of both sides in the strike of the 1994 professional baseball season. The 1995 season might have been jeopardized had it not been for a forced resolution between baseball team owners and the players. Despite this, many fans still are disillusioned with their idols of the past.

While all of the big name players made millions of dollars playing the sport for money, thousands of other leagues played just for the love of the game. They had dreams of making it to the big leagues. In high schools and other leagues, people played ball to improve their skills and knowledge of the game. Many players had mixed feelings about the actions due to the strike. Junior Christian Kidd stated, "I feel the Major League strike was ridiculous considering they make so much money."

These feelings did not affect the Knights this year, or the support of their dedicated fans. The hometown team finished third going into the last game of the season. The win by Colonial Heights over Hopewell, however, knocked the team back to fourth place, and out of the district playoffs. Despite the disappointing end to the season, they grew and enjoyed the camaraderie and teamwork they shared.

Power play Striding to the plate, senior Trevor Lyons hurls a strike to the catcher. As one of the top pitchers in the district, Trevor proved to be a leader and an example for the rest of the team.

Demonstrating poise, grace, and flexibility, she glides across the floor, her gossamer ribbon floating elegantly about her slender figure. Her heart beats with the music, adrenalin courses through her veins, and sweat beads down her forehead as she ends the performance with a striking pose.

As the 1996 Olympic Games swiftly approached, no one was more aware than 16-year-old Ginny Ledgerwood. In 1994, she was awarded an all-expense paid trip to Atlanta to try out for the national team. However, it was decided that no more rhythmic gymnasts were needed. Ledgerwood was then invited to try out for the World Championships. The tryouts were held in Colorado, and again, it was determined that only the national team would attend. Soon after, Ginny was invited to try out for the 1996 Olympic team, and it was certain that rhythmic gymnasts outside of the national team would be needed in order to attend the competition. "It may come down to size. If they are looking for short, I will probably be cut. If they are looking for tall, I'm likely in," she stated. If Ginny was selected to compete in the Olympic Games in Atlanta in 1996, she would move to Chicago with the other gymnasts to train. "The possibility of becoming an Olympic champion is a great honor and a goal that I hope someday will be able to meet." Our hearts are with you. Good luck!

Standing in silence with his toes on the end of the platform, the jumper slowly glances to the distant ground. From his high vantage point, he can still hear the babbling of the icy water below. Receiving final instructions, he gives his harnesses one last tug to be sure they are secure. The jumper draws in a sharp breath that he prays won't be his last. Turning around to face his instructor, he allows his body to lose its equilibrium and fall gracefully off the platform. Sometimes finding your place in life means stepping out on nothing more than your prayers.

Driving It Home

The night finally arrives. Classy couples proceed in their sleek tuxedos and gorgeous dresses. Others strut in their shredded jeans and washed-out t-shirts. Slow dances are played while the queen and king are crowned. Many attempt the infamous velcro wall while others choose to view an old flick. While this may seem like a clash of cultures, it is actually a glimpse of what the upperclassmen and their dates experienced at this year's prom night. Not only did students have the opportunity to enjoy the traditional prom dance, but they also got the chance to relax, hang loose, and enjoy the company of their friends at the school's first ever after-prom celebration.

From midnight until 6:00 AM early Sunday morning, students had the opportunity to attend the SADD sponsored after-prom party. "I'm glad this school offered an alternative for students," said junior Peggy McCauley. At the party, one had the option of dancing in the cafeteria, receiving a free caricature, playing in the open gym, or trying the velcro wall. "I didn't expect it to be as fun as it was," said junior Heather Craun. The velcro wall was definitely the main attraction of the party. SADD sponsor Cathy Mayo said, "I'm very proud of the students who put together this activity, and I'm glad that it turned out as well as it did." Many thanks go to the members of SADD and all who helped make the party a success. Prom 1995 introduced a new and exciting tradition that all should look forward to experiencing!

SAVing the World

Our community is in crisis.... In 1992, over 150 people were murdered in Richmond, and crime soared by 20 percent. Last year, Richmond was voted one of the top 10 most dangerous places to live. Something has to change...and something has.

Students Against Violence was founded last year by 1994 graduate Brian Brooks to help prevent violence in our community. One of the most rewarding projects they participated in this year was the money drive for the survivors of the Gilpin Court murders. Senior Kendra Bonner explained, "(we) helped out the survivors by giving them money and shelter." This activity was rewarding to the students, and it helped restore the faith of the community in the younger generation. Sponsor Jose Fuentes stated, "We showed the community that the youth of today are still concerned with the problems around them." The dedication of the members to this drive was also commended by the faculty during one of the many assemblies of the year.

People in our community have lost faith in the youth of today. Too often they hear about the gangs, violence, and drugs that plague our young people. It is comforting to know that students have finally taken a stand against the negative pressures of society.

Acting Up

A clean costume room, organized props, a waxed floor on the stage, and a renewed spirit... signs of the beginning of a new season for the theater department. With the introduction of the new theater teacher, Charmaine Sanders, came also the introduction of many new opportunities for students.

With the production of The Crucible, the theater students shocked the community into full attention. "It was like the people who came to see the show paid attention for the first time. It was great!" said senior John Roper. Admittedly, the production of The Crucible was risky business. To expect a large number of high school students to sit still through a three hour show was indeed a miracle. However, it went well due to great publicity and help from teachers. Students enjoyed the drama department's assembly in which excerpts from the production were performed. Many students, impressed with the talent of the performers, became curious about the play and decided to attend. "We couldn't have pulled it off without the help of the teachers and parents; they were a tremendous support group," said Mrs. Sanders.

The production of The Wiz was another success. Auditions for this popular musical drew students with a variety of talents. Actors, singers, and dancers all contributed to present a spirited performance.

Drama students agreed that enjoyment of their work contributed to their successes. Sophomore Jessica Parks said, "The whole point is to have fun and enjoy what you do. If you can't do that, then why bother?"

Budding Politicians

Creating, developing, sharing, learning, thinking, and taking initiative are the responsibilities of leaders. Leaders are created, not born, and few can be true leaders of their organizations.

discuss policy and public matters. The program has been operating for four years at Swift Creek Mill Playhouse under the direction of Delegate Kirk Cox. Teenage Republicans was fairly new to the school, bringing national politics to the attention of students. TR also brought local leaders to discuss issues with students. It gave its members the ability to learn about the government and gain experience while developing their leadership potential. Both programs attempted to bring governmental awareness to the younger generation who will become the voters and the leaders of tomorrow.

A Royal Pain

Both regal and elegant, his majesty stands at the palace's balcony overlooking the townspeople. How wonderful was the feeling of power, of control! His position as king bestowed upon him countless honors and gifts...if only his subjects were truly aware of the struggles, hardships, and responsibilities he encountered every day.

The leaders of our classes often endured this same dilemma as students forgot the stress and countless hours that went into each of the activities the classes organized. From Bleacher Bashes to student-faculty basketball games, and Prom to the Senior Picnic, class officers had a busy year attempting to keep up with each activity they worked on.

Though most classes

elected their officers the year before, the freshman class was at a distinct disadvantage because their elections had to be held after school began. "Even though we got a late start on our activities, the freshman class still contributed many fun-filled events," stated freshman president Alexis Battison.

In fact, their year seemed to only get better. By the end of the school year, the freshman class was able to pull off the infamous Bleacher Bash, where students were allowed to dunk the teacher of their choice, nibble on tasty snacks, and enjoy being with their friends. Sophomores got early practice on prom preparation. They assisted the junior class in decorating the Prom and were even able to help serve refreshments throughout the evening. Juniors truly got into decorating the building for the honored seniors; they spent endless hours working to perfect the night. Seniors, even though it was their final year, did not lose their enthusiasm for school. Dances were sponsored, picnics were held, and a beautiful awards assembly was given to end out the year.

Final Words

Opening their dusty yearbooks, the young couple gasps as their minds flood with memories of high school. Stuck between the pages are some old, tattered copies of newspapers and literary magazines whose faded print is still legible.

School newspapers, yearbooks, and literary magazines possess the ability to transport readers to the sentiments of the past. These publications would not exist, however, without the diligence, patience, and creativity of a dedicated staff. Senior Jonathan Dean said, "It is very time consuming. To have a successful yearbook, there must be commitment."

At the head of every production team is a strong teacher who sacrifices free time and stressless nights to guide the staff in the right direction. "Once a month, for one week, I work LONG hours helping the news staff," said Knightly News sponsor Elizabeth Reed. Everyone works together brainstorming, creating, and editing all the components of a literary work with hopes of having a successful final product. "Even though making a monthly newspaper demands a lot of work, the final product makes it all worthwhile," said Junior Knightly News staff member Peggy McCauley.

Journalists definitely keep themselves busy during the school year creating products that when finished, are priceless and will be cherished for years to come.

Getting started Squire sponsor Dr. Nancy Parrish and sophomore Lisa Ghidotti carefully read numerous stories, poems, and essays submitted by students for publication. This was only the first step in the process of producing the magazine.

Ahead of the game Working to finish the pages for the deadline, senior Wendy Daniel and junior Amanda Jarratt check layouts. Producing the yearbook meant working long hours after school for staff members.

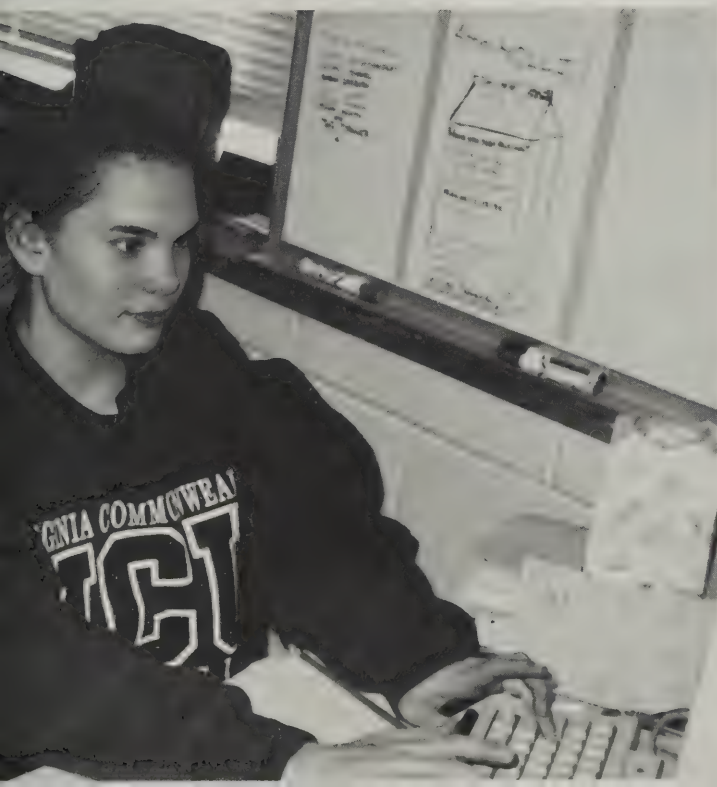

Making plans Deciding on a deadline, seniors Ciani Bush and Joseph Hepler look for a suitable date. The newspaper staff was successful in creating interesting and informative papers for all students.

Taking the initiative Shuffling hoards of paper, junior Karin Modesto sorts through her work. Meeting all deadlines required strong organization skills and dedicated teamwork.

"We have a very experienced staff that can really work together, and we always help each other. I've been on the staff for three years and I think this is the strongest staff we have ever had."

—Ciani Bush

"The Team Yearbook had quite a challenging year. Gaining new members as well as new advisors, the staff worked hard to learn pertinent publication skills and to meet deadlines on time. All in all, I believe this year's staff was quite successful."

THE BIG PICTURE

School expansion plans sure to cure overcrowding

By Megan Vanatta

From any given place within the school, screams of pain and sighs of exasperation can be heard. What is to blame for all this confusion? It is just the result of..."Ouch! Hey, watch where you're going!"... "Excuse me! Would you MIND moving? You ARE standing in front of my locker!"... "Get out of my way! I'm late to class!"...an overabundance of students. Many people complained, and some even attempted solutions, but the main question still remained: What was going to be done about this?

A final decision was not made, but many plans were presented to the school committee. These plans ranged from complete renovation of the existing building to constructing an entirely new high school. Regardless of the final decision, it was suggested that this building be altered somewhat. Proposed renovations included widening the halls, enlarging the classrooms, and installing new lighting and a new electronic communication system. These renovations were proposed with the hope that when a new high school was built, our building might become a middle school.

People hoped the renovation would not affect everyday life for students. Construction was scheduled to take place in the evenings and during the summer. Coach Vic Williams commented, "Thomas Dale has been through six or seven renovations already. When we start renovating again, it will be a mess!"

Holy moly! Evidence of the leaky ceilings in the school, the tile slowly chips away leaving a damaged floor in its wake. Such evidence proved that improvements were sorely needed.

Slight stress Frustration sets in as senior Tracey Waugh continues to tear away at her piles of homework. Balancing school work and social life was a problem for many people.

LAZY DAYS AHEAD

Computers make students' jobs easier

By Monica Powell

The sounds of tapping keys and humming printers fill the otherwise quiet room. Working diligently, the student analyzes the information that appears on the screen. Without leaving his seat, he can access hundreds of sources for his research paper. He collects titles, chapters, and page numbers, and prints them from his station in... the computer lab?

New technology and library renovations have connected the library with the rest of the school. The renovations put the library on-line with many of the school's computer labs. From various locations throughout the building, a student may look up any topic, title, or author on a computerized card catalog. This system also enables students to use a key word search to identify the chapters and page numbers of their research topics.

In addition to technological improvements, the library received a large portion of an 80,000 book donation to several schools by Cities in Schools National. The books, all published by Penguin, have cut down on the library's costs. "The school system does not appropriate enough money for the needed library materials," said librarian Marjorie Clark. The extra money will go into buying new encyclopedias and other reference materials.

Also new in the library will be twelve computer workstations for accessing various programs. These additions will make research quicker and easier for students and teachers. Though keeping up with constantly changing technology is a challenge, such technology will greatly benefit the school population as it progresses toward a technologically-advanced world.

Sorting it all Librarian Marjorie Clark gives the library a spring cleaning. One part of the library renovations was getting rid of outdated material.

Packing it away Struggling to find more space, librarian Catherine Welsch moves more books into the storage room. The librarians had trouble finding space to put all the new books while construction was underway.

Searching for answers Using class time wisely, sophomore Chris Clements and teacher Chris Rose search for information on his report. The new reference materials the library bought this year have made it easy for students to research their projects.

Working hard Putting the library's new equipment to good use, senior Mark Gilstrap works diligently on his research for a report. The new sections added to the library gave students more room to work and provided space for more resources.

CULTURE SHOCK

New assemblies broaden students horizons

By Karin Modesto

The actors rush off stage as the lights brighten the theater. The orchestra ends their performance with a solid note, and the conductor turns around and takes a bow. Is this a night at the Carpenter Center? A special on A&E? Actually, it is the grand finale of one of many cultural assemblies performed at school with the intent of providing the student body with a deeper understanding and appreciation for the humanities.

When students were asked what they wanted to see more of at school, their reply was assemblies. It is a break from the monotonous, day-to-day routine of classes that gives students the opportunity to relax and sing the alma mater, said junior John Ratliff. The administration decided to take these wishes and make them reality by arranging a special assembly for each Wednesday. My favorite assembly was the symphony. It was a great experience for orchestra students, said junior Amy Page. Students were exposed to a one-man volleyball team, the Richmond Symphony, a fashion show, and several student-produced skits by the school chorus, band, orchestra, yearbook, and drama departments. The assemblies gave me the chance to perform in front of the whole student body, said junior Tohry Petty.

The assemblies are definitely one experience students will remember as an opportunity to perform, interact, and observe the talents of others.

Edging slowly to the door, the young sky diver feels the cool March air seeping into the plane. Below her, she sees her friends floating toward each other into formation. Swallowing the lump of fear lodged in her throat, she springs into the weightlessness of free-fall and dives to reach her teammates. With all her energy, she stretches to reach the extended hands and feels the exhilaration of achievement. Each person has the responsibility to give 110% to the group. Sometimes you have to strive that extra mile to make a difference.

Surprise! Surprise! Mouth gaping in jubilant surprise, Elizabeth Harrison begins to make her way hurriedly over to an old friend. The summer months often made the first day of school a joyful reunion for many students.

MOST MEMORABLE MOMENTS

SENIORS RECAP THE PAST FOUR YEARS

Through out the four (or more) years that the class of 1995 attended this school, countless events and experiences made an enormous impact on their lives. These are just a few that will remain lasting memories for many years to come...

"Good grades on my report card..."

OUR PAINTED MEMORIES

ILLEGAL SCHOOL TRADITION ENDURES

Does this sound familiar? "Hey man! Whatcha gonna write?"

"Dude, good question! I think I'll paint my initials."

"Oops! Uh, guys...I just dropped the blue. If I could just go back down..."

"You idiot!! Now we'll have to do it all in red!"

"Hey guys! Chill! It's 2 A.M. I want to get this done! Let's write...hmm.... Dazed and Confused!"

The tradition of painting the water tower has been carried out by students since 1977, as early records indicated. Senior Kelly Jacobs expressed, "It's a tradition that should be continued through years to come."

Over the years, though, the tradition has been "misinterpreted" by law as vandalism. Anyone caught climbing and painting the tower could get jail time and a fine. These restrictions, however, made it more challenging. A senior painter of Dazed and Confused, the Red Devil said, "The water tower was a chance for me and my colleagues to break free of society and say 'No!' Sure it was fun to do, but it was also a chance for us to express our feelings."

Students felt as if nothing they did really made a difference. It seemed that there was always someone telling them what to do. Senior Kari Rothenberger summed it up by saying, "We're sick of living by the rules."

The student body carried on the tradition of painting the water tower this year despite the warnings and dangers involved. Mr. Anonymous stated that there were plenty who were willing to take the risk, and offered this piece of advice to future tower painters: "I climbed the water tower for exercise because it's a long way to climb. To the next person- make sure you're in shape before you try it!"

"...it's a long way to climb...make sure you're in shape before you try it!"

Tall talk Towering over the campus, the water tower looks as dazed and confused as the students. Painting the tower was always a chore, but someone had to do it.

THE WASTED DAY

SENIORS ENJOY AN EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGE

Walking down a nearly deserted hallway, the students felt alone in the building which was once crowded with over 1500 bodies. No flood or other natural calamity had struck the area... it was Senior Skip Day, and only the dedicated remained.

Senior Skip Day was a tradition that occurred the Monday after prom every year. Even though it was only for seniors, a lot of underclassmen took the opportunity to skip as well. Many seniors felt that this day should be a tradition only for them. Senior Andy Beidler said, "We have worked long and hard for the past twelve years; we deserve the day off."

Many people wondered where students went and what they did when skipping school. "It is a great day to get together with all your friends... one last time," said senior Chris Simmons. Some went to the beach, others spent the weekend with college friends, and many just caught up on sleep that they had lost during the past months.

Despite the complaints from many teachers, administrators, and parents, Senior Skip Day remained a tradition. Senior Clint Metzger justified the day by saying, "Senior Skip Day is a good idea because it gives those of us about to graduate a chance to relieve some of the pressures put upon us by the closing of the school year."

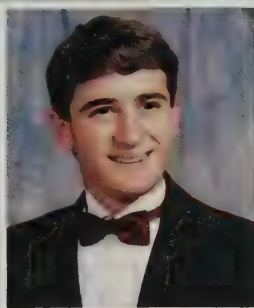

"We have worked long and hard for the past twelve years; we deserve the day off."

LEGAL HOOKEY IN ACTION

TO EXEMPT OR NOT TO EXEMPT...

Screams of agony and terror echo down the hallway as red-eyed, over-caffeinated students file into their classrooms. The long, tiring nights of endless studying will now be put to the ultimate test. Longingly staring out of the classroom window, the student catches a glimpse of leisurely bodies strolling toward their cars. Through envious eyes, she watches the seniors leave the campus.

Many underclassmen complained that it was not fair to require them to take exams while seniors had an opportunity to exempt.

Seniors, however, did not agree. Senior Ciani Bush commented, "Only seniors should be allowed to exempt. It's our privilege. Plus, it's something for seniors to look forward to." Seniors had the option, but they worked hard for it. Seniors made an effort to come to class, work hard, and turn work in on time.

Many prepared for the senior year by setting goals for each class. Senior David Wingo said, "I try and turn in my work. I also study for all my tests and really pay attention in most of my classes."

There were certain criteria to meet for exemptions. Seniors were required to have a "B" average and could not miss more than five days or accumulate more than five tardies for one class. Most seniors went the extra mile to come to class and study harder.

"Only seniors should be allowed to exempt. It's our privilege."

— Ciani Bush

All work, to play Senior Jimmy Stark puts all his effort into class so that he does not have to cram the week before exams. Many seniors tried hard to keep up their grades and attendance so they could exempt their exams.

BACK TO THE FUTURE

STUDENTS CONTEMPLATE THE COMING YEARS

As the doors open, the yellow light of the gymnasium floods into the hallway. Awe struck figures file slowly through the doors as they examine the room with wide eyes searching for their friends. "Has it really been ten years since we last walked down these halls?" one of them wonders aloud. The year is 2005, and the graduating class of 1995 has returned for its ten year reunion.

As the 1995 graduation grew near, seniors began to wonder about the future. Beyond the excitement of graduation lay the feared concept of real life. "It's a scary thought- being on your own, but the adrenaline is overpowering," said senior Andrea Brandenberger. The future was of great concern to many seniors. In the next ten years, life paths would take unforeseen turns. Many would become doctors, lawyers, writers, mechanics, and parents. Dreams that seemed unattainable would be reached, and those which were close at hand might be put aside.

Some looked to the future with gladness and hope. Senior Bethni Han-non said, "There is a... feeling of awe for everyone leaving a place they've known for so long." For others, the future was a threat that hung above them every day. Despite the uncertainty of what lay ahead, most students agreed that we all have the power to make the most of our lives.

"It's a scary thought- being on your own, but the adrenaline is overpowering."

THE RIGHT TO RULE

STUDENTS LEAD OUR GENERATION

As the votes are tallied, the candidates sit with anxious anticipation. Fidgeting slightly, they wish each other luck through strained smiles. The sponsor walks to the front of the room with slow and deliberate steps. Pausing briefly for effect, she reads the results. "I'd like to announce the new president, senior...."

Seniors had numerous opportunities to exhibit leadership skills by joining clubs and running for offices. Senior Josh Green said, "Seniors have to separate themselves by showing leadership skills which enable them to take on more responsibilities." The reward of these additional responsibilities was not only more privileges, but experience for life. Senior class president Jonathan Dean stated, "Leadership skills... equip you later in life for the challenges you are going to face." Seniors learned responsibility in the positions they held in clubs and organizations.

It was the tradition of seniors to be the leaders of the school. Senior Natalie Chishlom said, "Seniors need to have leadership so that the underclassmen will have someone to look up to, and they can learn leadership when it is their time to be seniors!" By being positive role models, and not abusing privileges, seniors helped to secure liberties for the classes to come.

*"Leadership skills...equip you later in life for the challenges you are going to face."

SENIORS DIVIDE ON ISSUE OF LOCATION

Angry voices echoed throughout the crowded hallways as petitions were passed and opinions were voiced. The controversy centered around the Great Graduation Debate of 1995, which resulted from the change in location of the ceremony.

Many students felt the decision was unfair. "...the meetings were not announced. If seniors had known more, they would have made time to take part in the decision," complained senior Ellen Barber. She would have preferred graduation to be held "at our stadium simply because it's more meaningful to have it at the school...to be here one last time for a very special ceremony."

Despite tradition, many seniors were in favor of graduating at the Richmond Coliseum. Senior Heath McDaniel commented, "The Coliseum can hold all that want to come, and being indoors ensures that graduation will be on schedule."

For others, the idea of finishing school was more important than the location of graduation. "I don't care where it's at, just mail me my diploma with my report card," responded senior Aiysha Bey.

Regardless of the differing opinions about the location of the ceremony, graduation has been, and always will be, one of the most cherished events of one's high school years, no matter where it takes place.

"I supported the decision because I wanted to graduate at the Coliseum."

-Marcus Hawthorn

A finishing touch Thinking about graduation, senior Ricky Hall imagines the day he will wear his new cap and gown. Most students looked forward to their senior year with anticipation.

REAL SAND BLAST

SENIORS PLAN GRAD CELEBRATION

Where can kids find a place with no parents, no supervision, and all the fun a kid could possibly dream of? A place where warm sands, rolling waves, and the scent of tropical oils come together to produce a feeling of total relaxation? Virginia Beach, Myrtle Beach, Nags Head, and cruises to Cancun, Jamaica, the Bahamas, and even Hawaii provided such experiences of relaxation and fun for new high school graduates.

Why would someone travel all the way to Cancun for Senior Beach Week? "I chose Cancun because I want to get away from Chester and be relaxed with my two best friends," said senior Meridith Taylor.

Other seniors expressed different ideas about their Senior Beach Week. "This year is my senior year, and I plan to have a blast in Hawaii," said senior Monica Inzaina. Many seniors said that the main reason they were going to Beach Week was to be with friends one last time before going away to college.

Beach Week was a special time for everyone who went, whether they travelled to Virginia Beach or Cancun. For some, this was a beginning of independence, the first steps out from under their parents' wings. For many, this was also a last celebration with friends before moving on in different directions. In the midst of graduation excitement and anticipation of the future, this week of escape was truly an unforgettable one.

"I plan to have a blast in Hawaii."

Sleep...what's that?

School and jobs cause insomnia for students

You become conscious of a sharp tapping beside your ear. Jolting awake, you realize that your teacher has stirred you from your slumber.

Many students went to school for six hours and then to work for another four to eight hours, not including homework. For some, a job was a way to make extra money and help out at home. Senior Cara Ghidotti said, "I work for myself, and I try not to add extra things for my parents." Others added that school was still a priority. Senior Cheryl Emerson stated that "work comes and goes, but school gives you an education."

Every day students complained about lacking the time for homework, sports, extra-curricular activities, and even sleep. Senior Amy Wrenn sheepishly admitted, "It's hard to juggle work, school and volleyball. There's no time for all of them or anything else."

Catching zzz's Snoozing away in math class, freshman D.J. Overton regains lost sleep from the night before. Students involved in extracurricular activities and jobs were pressed for time from morning to night.

Change of Pace

New curriculum prepares students for life

"I didn't get the correct answer to number 12," a timid voice calls from the back of the room. As the teacher quickly shuffles through her papers, she finds that she didn't get the answer either. Jolting awake in a state of panic, the teacher realizes it was all a dream. Such is the nightmare many teachers faced with the struggle of teaching a new curriculum.

Changes occurred in the Math, English, and History departments. Although the goals of each area were different, one common idea united them all: make the students aware of the world around them and prepare them to interact appropriately with it.

Teachers agreed that the change was beneficial. "Any decision made for education should be made for what is best for the students, not what is most expedient for the teachers," said English Department Chairperson, Mrs. Claudia Adams. Teachers could foresee the benefit for students entering the job market. Math teacher, Ms. Chris Alcaraz stated, "We are preparing kids for jobs that have not been invented yet."

Although the curriculum changes resulted in some extra preparation, many students did not realize the changes had occurred. Junior Tohry Petty said, "Math has always been a struggle. I have not and probably won't ever notice the difference."

Number crunching Determined to find a solution to the equation, junior Jason Zeh ponders over his calculator for the results. The new curriculum helps to prepare students for the unavoidable demands of college and the work force.

Rebels without a cause

Generation
X
struggles to overcome its stereotype

"Hey Rick, why didn't you study? Don't you care about grades?"

"Not really."

Sound familiar? Throughout the year, determination and apathy collided. Many students worked hard for good grades, but others fell into the media-created, apathetic attitude of Generation X.

It is obvious that the media used Generation X for profit. "You see Generation X images everywhere," said junior Peggy McCauley. MTV based its survival on promoting "X-er" themes. Music idols celebrated the slacker attitude, and the movie industry used the washed-out, coffee-drinking, cigarette-smoking image to appeal to teens. Films, such as Reality

Bites and Slacker, based their plots on teen alienation. "These actors and bands are like foster parents for a lost generation," said senior Margie Spencer.

Some reflected that social problems lead teens to identify with Generation X. Senior Mandy Brooks said, "Generation X is the lost generation... the children of corruption, drugs, crime, and teen pregnancy."

Many defied "X-er" images, and took action to make changes. For example, concerned students helped Students Against Violence assist a family which suffered tragedy. Generation X, influential as it may be, is a label that some individuals have chosen not to wear.

Bored stiff Tired of watching the Homecoming game, sophomores Paula Edwards and Bonnie Hall look like they would rather be somewhere else. Similar expressions were often seen in halls and classrooms as students thought of other places they would rather be.

Behind closed doors

Bedrooms are more than just a place for sleep

Open the door to your own world. The choice of music is yours. The clock is set to your time. You can throw your sweater anywhere. It's your room.

Most people decorated in order to obtain certain atmosphere in their rooms. Trey Taylor gave his room a Chariots of Fire theme, with red tones. "I like to run," he said.

People also used their rooms as places to nestle special memories of childhood. Mandy Monroe kept an "old rabbit and a funny ostrich from Fantasia."

Music posters and paintings dominated many teenage rooms. Tracy Waungh said, "I'm interested in protecting our rain forests, so I have posters of them."

While bedrooms were places for dreams and sun pouring over sleepy faces, they also reflected their decorators' personalities.

A personalized haven After an afternoon of homework, senior Tracy Waugh takes time to make a quick call. Most students used creativity to personalize their rooms.

Kiss and Tell

Students share their most embarrassing dating moments

The night is warm, and a light breeze ruffles your hair as you escort your date to the Prom. As you ascend the steps, you trip, banging your knees on the concrete and smashing your face into the rear end of another Prom-goer. Many humiliating events occurred as students ventured into dating.

Some braved restaurants with dates. Senior Dawn Dixon remembered, "I had to excuse myself to go to the rest-room. I hadn't realized that I failed to completely pull my skirt down in the back, leaving nothing to the imagination."

Others tried double dating. "I was out with my boyfriend and another couple. When the guy turned to kiss his date, she moved, and I was in the clear; need I say more?" said junior Allison Varmer.

Most students dared once again to enter the uncertain but fun world of dating. As the sweetheart slipups continued, they remembered, "There's always next weekend."

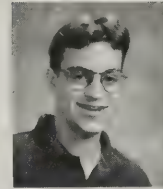

The cold shoulder? Feeling lonely, junior Sean Ward appears to be shunned by Calliope Pappadakis who tries to avoid a pointless conversation. Many students found the first interaction with a potential date to be an embarrassing one.

Babysitting bloopers

Baby-sitting isn't for kids

Teens find the only sure way to make quick cash is through "kid-sitting." Long nights watching TV with sweet little angels can never erase the harrowing experiences with these same little devils who make sitters work double time for their pay.

"I was helping my sister change my nephew one day, and told her to watch out after she took off his diaper because he might end up squirting her in the eye. She told me not to worry about it, and just then he peed all over her. Boy, what a straight shooter."

—Kelly Dougherty
"The most embarrassing thing that happened to me while I was babysitting was when the kids I was watching locked me out of my house, and a couple of my friends from school walked by while I was trying to get back in the house. It wouldn't have been so bad if I wasn't in my bath robe."

—Scherrell Battle
"I babysat for a woman who didn't come home until 1:30 A.M. on school nights. I was watching TV while the kids were playing, and I fell asleep. I guess the kids were hungry so they ransacked the kitchen. When I woke up, they were trying to make pudding with chocolate syrup."

—Kelly Mooney

Tender loving care Smiling in the autumn atmosphere, sophomore Kelly Joe Dougherty holds the child she is babysitting. Sometimes babysitting gets the reputation of being an insignificant job, but the qualities of the babysitter can affect the child greatly.

Free Wheeling Fright

Learning to drive parents crazy

The time has come. The years of usual experience as a new driver. "We were coming back from D.C. and I didn't want to drive anymore, so I pulled over. When I opened my door to get out, Rustie, my cocker spaniel, jumped out, and I had to chase her down the interstate."

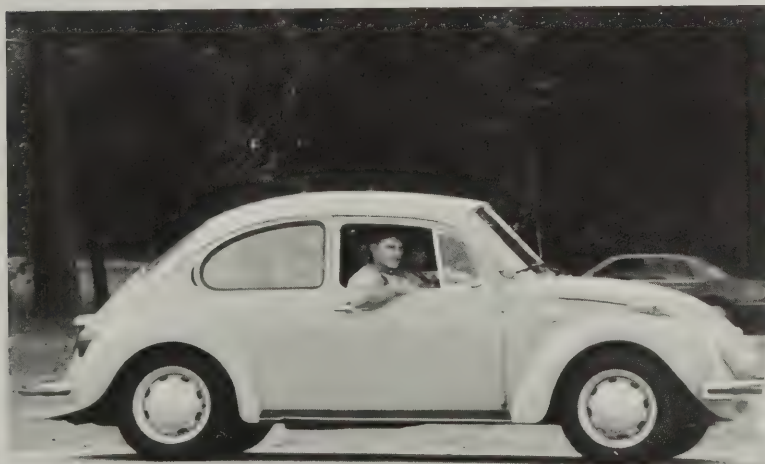

For some students early driving experiences resulted in embarrassment. "On Halloween, I backed into a ditch and got stuck. I had to get everyone from the party to push me out," said senior Kathy Miller. Her sister, junior Becky Miller added, "All of a sudden, I saw the lights go straight up."

Sophomore Erin Nichols had an unusual experience as a new driver. "We were coming back from D.C. and I didn't want to drive anymore, so I pulled over. When I opened my door to get out, Rustie, my cocker spaniel, jumped out, and I had to chase her down the interstate."

The experiences varied from being utterly bizarre to positively embarrassing. Even with these risks, as the enchanted age of sixteen approached, many teenagers were seen roaming around car dealerships and purchasing parking permits.

On the move Getting ready to leave school after the end of the day, senior Henry Clere starts to pull out of his parking space. Many students anticipated getting their driver's license so they would not have to depend on others for a ride.

Morning madness

Making time for morning rituals

Singing in the shower, brushing teeth while listening to the radio, and hogging the bathroom the despite screams of siblings are common morning occurrences. Students have their own special rituals to help them start the morning off right.

"I talk to my dog every morning."

-Faith Martin

"I have to pull my new cat off of my clothes so I can leave to walk to the bus stop."

-Hannah Young

"I make it a point to speak with my animals - everybody needs to feel loved."

-Stephanie Morales

"I sacrifice a goat and drink its blood."

-Danny Willard

"I kiss my boyfriend's picture every morning."

-Sametria Hart

"Eat Coco Puffs with chocolate milk."

-Doug Thompson

A day's work Making his bed before school, freshman Mark Hannon tries to keep things neat and orderly for his return home. Many students have various morning rituals that they have continued since childhood.

Gym class horror stories

The truth your friends never tell

Beads of sweat start to form as you watch the seconds of the clock tick away. Shuddering at the sound of the bell, you reluctantly stand up and make your way through the crowd to the horror of your life... GYM CLASS!!

Physical Education was not only a time to get fit while getting some fresh air, but also a time to get beaten, bruised, and totally embarrassed. "One day while I was walking to the tennis courts, a bird decided to relieve himself on me," said Junior Jodi Flatt.

Others had a better time embarrassing themselves. Sophomore Jamie English, who remembered walking into a No Parking sign near the tennis courts, said, "That was embarrassing, and I was made fun of for awhile."

Although the requirement for gym class lasted only two years, the humiliation and ridicule from classmates lasted much longer.

Extreme humiliation Glancing across the gymnasium with a look of dread, freshman Jessica Warren, clad in the stylish gym suit, prepares for gym class. Some underclassmen had to suffer through embarrassing moments in P.E. just to get one needed credit.

Munchkin land

Why are the
so small?

The house lands with a thud. Curious as to her whereabouts, the girl opens the door and steps into a wonderland. Suddenly a small man pops out of the bushes. We welcome you to Munchkin Land, or in other words, the freshman hallway.

Whenever one walked the halls and spotted a freshman, it was evident that freshmen were getting smaller every year. Sophomore Anika McMichael joked, "They're small because of the economy; there's not enough money to feed all of them!"

It was true that freshmen were miniature versions of upperclassmen physically, but when it came to size in numbers, "they're sort of like fleas; they are small, come in numbers, and you can't get rid of them!" said Junior Elizabeth Wynne.

Some upperclassmen believed that they were just born small and would stay that way.

While it is true that the freshmen were small at the beginning of the year, they grew in size, power, intelligence, and achievement as the year passed.

Measuring up Demonstrating an extreme height difference, senior David Wingo towers over freshman Jason Pegram. By their senior year, many freshmen are unrecognizable as a result of physical and emotional growth.

Did the school meet your expectations?

The sunlight filters through the blinds as you rise, slowly realizing this is your last day of freedom before school begins. The excitement builds, and you begin to dream of the days to come. Freshmen voiced many expectations of high school.

"I expected it to be fun and with a lot of cute guys."

-Jennifer Kennedy

"I expected teachers who were young and cool."

-Matt Belcher

"I thought it would be a lot tougher in the halls with what I heard from friends already going to school here."

-Corey Mosher

"I thought high school was going to be fun and we would see our older friends again, but we were stuck in the back of the school."

-Travis Coghill

"I was sure it was going to be fun with more parties and girls."

-Stephen Mutter

"I thought it would be basically the same as middle school but with more honeys."

-Lamar Olivier

"I thought it would be lots of fun, but how can you have fun being in trailers and sitting in a class for an hour and a half?"

-Trudy Williams

"I thought it would be fun but hard."

-Jessica Uhrig

"I expected high school to be fun and full of surprises."

-Jennifer Miller

"I thought it would be a real great experience!"

-David Gilliatt

"I thought high school would be tough but altogether it's pretty cool!"

-Chrissy Davis

At first glance

First day leaves lasting impression

Hustled along by the crowd, the girl is thrust into the maze of hallways. She is bounced like a pinball between bookbags and lockers, miraculously finding her homeroom as the bell rings.

Such was the first day for freshmen. Opinions about the day varied. Michelle DeGrandis said, "I thought it would be really hard, but...it's been fun so far."

Many students thought lunch was the best part of the day. Fifteen minutes without teachers was a needed break. Most students talked about who was dating whom and what teachers they had. Many compared high school to middle school. Amanda Berisford said that high school "is definitely better than middle school, especially the food; at least it's edible."

After a brief lunch break, students reluctantly returned to their classes. As the final bell sounded, they charged out of the building like mad bulls. At the end of a frantic first day, Zack Weaver exclaimed, "It wasn't as fun as I heard, but it had its surprises."

Smooth transitions Anxious to begin the year, freshmen April Konezka and Anthony Runyon discuss their new schedules. First impressions of high school were overwhelming for many; however, by the second month of school, most freshmen had adapted well.

What annoys you most about upperclassmen?

Freshmen are tired of being snubbed by the upperclassmen they share the building with. Though some think their status has been affected by the change in scheduling, many agree that upperclassmen attitudes annoy them most.

"Their attitudes towards the fact that we are freshmen. They think we're 15, 16, or 17, but when they find out our age, they treat us like we're five."

-Jessica Uhrig

"They think that we're not here, but we are, so get over it."

-Chrissy Davis

"They think they're all that just because they are two or three years older than us."

-Matt Belcher

"I never really see them."

-Corey Mosher

"They do not bother me."

-Jennifer Kennedy

"They sometimes act like they are too good for us, but other times they're pretty cool."

-Annie Ridout

"They are my friends! Friends I say!"

-David Gilliatt

"I know a lot of them so they are nice to me."

-Travis Coghill

"Well if you want my opinion, they treat me pretty nice because most of them are cool..."

Students of stone

Upperclassmen wonder if freshmen are alive

Shouts and screams come from three corners of the gym as a giant, furry bird is killed and cooked. Wait, aren't there four corners? The freshmen sit in silence as the upperclassmen chant with spirit, "Beat Bird!" Lack of freshmen spirit was evident throughout many activities.

Students had many theories on the apathy of the freshmen. "I don't think freshmen have school spirit because everybody jokes on them," said sophomore Chris Erler. Many fellow students felt the same. Junior Jeanelle Bullock thought the lack of spirit was due to the separation of freshmen from the rest of the school. She said, "They really don't feel like a part of it." Many other students also felt that block scheduling was the root of the problem. "Freshmen are never around the other classes," stated junior Amineh Vatani.

Although concerns were voiced about the isolation of the freshmen, they developed a sense of school spirit by the end of the year.

A tense moment Freshmen Crystal Kennedy, Leah Duncan, and Melissa Cumbie observe an anxious moment at the Homecoming game. Many freshmen did show school spirit by supporting the Knights on the fields and courts.

What do you think about block scheduling?

Students who entered our school as freshmen this year faced many typical changes that we all have endured. In addition to these, however, they had to adjust to a new way of taking classes...block scheduling.

"I don't like it because on the next odd or even day you spend too much time reviewing what you did the previous class. Also you have two days to do your homework, but you have two or three times as much to do."

-Bryan Lesko

"I like it because it gives me more time to do my homework."

-David Voros

"It makes the day go by faster, and it gives you more time to do homework. I get less zeros because I have two nights to do it."

-Jordan Sibley

"It really doesn't seem we are in class for that long. I really like block scheduling."

-Jeffrey Worthey

"I like it. It makes the day go by quicker. Three classes a day is easier than six. I only have three classes of homework which is better too."

-Elizabeth Driggers

"Block schedulling has kept me from spending time with my friends who are in other grade levels. It makes us feel separated from the rest of the school."

No More Paydays

Just as we learned in Mr. Sheppard Smith's history class, reform occurs in cycles, change is inevitable, and history always repeats itself. From graduating seniors to school renovations, our community is always evolving. Unfortunately, moving forward often involves saying good-bye to those who have had the greatest impact on our lives.

Looking back on his career at our school, Mr. Smith has enjoyed many memorable experiences. He fondly remembered witnessing two seniors streak through the hallway during the seventies when such activities were popular. So much amusement could never live without the ongoing energy of Mr. Smith. Mandy Monroe reminisced about "when he jumped on the stool shouting 'The British are coming!' and kicking his legs imitating Paul Revere." Students learned a little more from the worldly history teacher than merely the discovery of America. Wendy Figard learned "not to be a boorish cretin and to always avoid 'Old Ugly' [Mr. Mike Morris]." For Tohry Petty and her fellow classmates, the song 'Davy Crockett' was also quite a learning experience. He even challenged many students, such as Gary Willis and Mandy Monroe, with Battle of the Brains trivia. Overall, Mr. Smith's students learned more from his teachings than mere book knowledge. They gained insight into their futures and a deep appreciation for learning.

Say cheese Smiling broadly at the cameraman, Shep Smith poses one last time. The humorous history teacher was a wonderful asset to the school's faculty in past years.

Taking a break Looking exhausted after a full day of teaching, physics teacher Cathy Mayo takes a minute to relax before gearing up for an after school SADD meeting. Many teachers donated time after school to sponsor and support numerous clubs and organizations at school.

In the Line of Fire

Morris/Smith debates heat up

Since the dawn of public schooling, students have subjected teachers to some of the most treacherous and outstanding name calling and gossip. This tradition is alive and well in today's modern society of learning; but in our school it is not between the students and teachers, but rather among the teachers themselves. The ones involved in taking this abrasive behavior to the limits were chemistry teacher, Mike Morris, and history teacher, Sheppard Smith.

Mike Morris believed without a doubt that his colleague, Sheppard Smith, was too old and was growing senile. "He is a grumpy old man who doesn't know the difference between real science and his personal fantasies," stated Morris. He felt that Smith was not in tune with the real world. Sheppard Smith, who considered himself to be a realist, said that Morris needed not believe everything he heard. "I do not go with the crowd. I am not a follower of the masses. I make decisions for myself." He felt Mike was incapable of deciding for himself.

Students delighted in being caught in the crossfire because it disrupted class and lightened the atmosphere. Senior Megan Dameron, who had both teachers, enjoyed the feud, "Because of snide remarks they give each other, you do not get stressed out. It adds humor to the classroom environment."

Unarmed Giving a false impression of good will, the Cretin and Curmudgeon take a break from their ongoing war. Their dueling humor created almost a side show for students.

Ho! Ho! Ho! Sporting the seasonal look, Mike Morris, chemistry teacher, dresses up like Santa Claus. This tradition has been a holiday favorite for many years.

Family tradition Physical Education teacher Eddie Goss flips through the game schedule to show his daughter where she will be cheering. This was the first year freshman Amy Goss joined her father as a T.D. Knight.

Homework hassle Chemistry teacher, Mike Morris finds an opportunity to check up on his son, junior Peter Morris. Students with parents on the faculty tried to avoid these situations.

Two's Company

Students see advantages to having faculty relations

The echo of footsteps resounds from somewhere behind you in the dimly lit hallway. Turning around, you see no one; yet you can't escape the feeling that you're being followed. As you turn the corner, you feel a hand fall abruptly on your shoulder and turn around to see . . . your parent.

Many of the students at our school have experienced this ; not because of parent conferences, but because their parents are one of the numerous faculty members at our school. Junior Petra Beierschmitt, whose father is German teacher, Dennis Beierschmitt, felt that having her father teach at the school she attended could be "utterly embarrassing at times, but it does have its advantages." Though students didn't always feel comfortable with having their parents at school with them, many of the teachers saw the benefits of such an arrangement. Chemistry teacher, Mr. Mike Morris stated, "The best part of your child being in school is being able to check with other students to see which assignments he's not doing, especially English." Such situations, unique to only a few, were beneficial to both the students and teachers.

Surviving the Fall

By

The late afternoon sun casts meager rays across an austere landscape. Gazing down the steep white slope, the extreme skier mentally prepares himself for the challenges ahead. Imagining sharp turns, trees, and moguls, he realizes that death awaits him with every move he makes. He surveys the slopes a final time and breathes in the crisp, February mountain air. Digging the poles resolutely into the snow, the adventurer pushes off down the mountain determined to make a clean run. For every action there is always a reaction. For every choice there is always a consequence.

We were so proud and happy when God gave us a very special gift whom we named Holli. Holli, you have brought much love and happiness to your family and friends.

Now as a senior we know our special gift will continue to make us proud. God bless.

Love,
Mom

Danielle

Johnson

Dani,

Congratulations! We are very proud of you.

Love,
Mom and Jerry

Stacy Johnson

Dear Stacy,

We are very proud of you and your accomplishments. We wish you the very best in your plans for the future.

Love,
Mom and Dad

Mike Dunbar

Mike,

You've always given life a special touch. As for the future, set your sails to the wind and go after your dreams. May God bless you on your way. We love you!

Love, Mom & Dad

Tracy Johnson

Dear Tracy,

Congratulations - May all your dreams come true. Health and happiness lie with you. We are proud of you and love you.

Mark and Gloria

Anne Perkins

Anne,

congratulations! You have always brought a smile to our face.

Love,

Mom and Dad

Justin Price

Justin,

It seems like just yesterday you were in kindergarten. We are very proud of you. Congratulations and Best Wishes!

Love,

Mom, Dad, Alison, and Melissa

Celena Smith

Celena,

Look at you, stepping into the future with open visions of tomorrow. From TD to Savannah, making your dreams come true.

Very Proud,
Mom

Jason

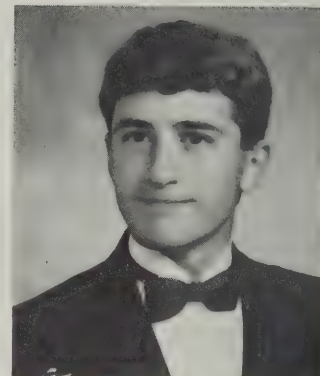

Duncan

Jason,

From this little boy, to a high school senior. The time has passed much too quickly. Yet we are very proud of the young man you have become.

With so much love,

Mom, Dad, Leah, and Tyler

Josh

Green

Josh,

Congratulations! You have always been your own person. We are proud of you and know this accomplishment is just one of many that are yet to come.

Love,

Mom, Dad, Jake, and Joe

Stacey and Tracey Frame

Stacey and Tracey,
To have the perfect
child is so wonderful.
But to have two of a kind is a true blessing. You two give so much and never ask anything in return.
We all love you both very much and are so proud of you two.

Love, Mom and Dad,
Maw Maw and Paw Paw.

P.S. See you at the movies!

Meridith

Taylor

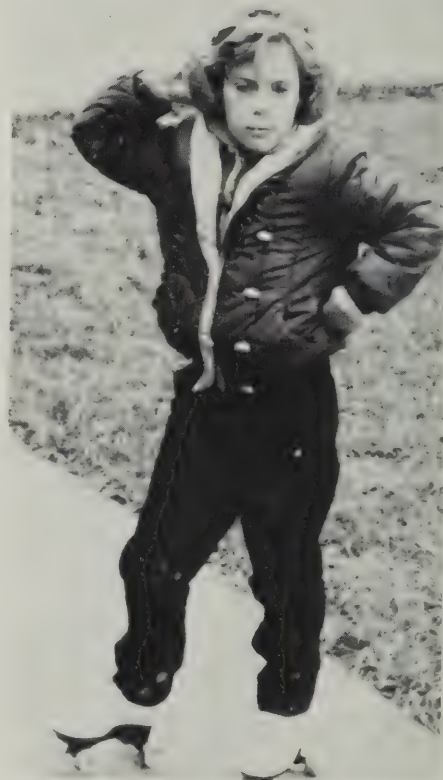

*Like the Morning Dew
Memories and Dreams fade quietly Along a silver green meadow as
The earth caresses the warmth
And power of each day.*

*Meridith, use each Day
Treasure it, Devour it
Squeeze the last second out
And turn it upside down.*

*For it will surrender to tomorrow
And you will share victory
With the sun and green meadow.*

You are WONDERFUL and we LOVE you.

Mom, Dad, John, and Friday

Ricky

"A son is a gift whose worth cannot be measured except by the heart." You will always be our star.

Love,

Mom, Jason, and Michael

Nathan McMichael

Nathan,

The years have passed quickly and we are proud of all you have accomplished. Continue to bring joy and laughter to those around you!

Love Always,

Mom, Dad, and Molly

Sarah Hague

For all that you are and all that you will become, you are loved. Today, is your day, you are off and away!

Congratulations, "Baby Girl."

All our Love,

Mom, Rudy, and Travis

Angela Termini

Dear Sister,
In life's path- May God's love wrap you in a blanket of safety,
May the sunshine of your smile warm everyone you meet,
May the fragrant blooms of success be fed by your achievements,
May the foundation of your future be cemented with the strength of your character,
And may the doors of happiness always be open wide to you!

Love,

Mom, Dad, and Chris

My Darling little baby girl, my Gingersnap, I fondly remember many special times we shared. It seems like yesterday that we helped a catapiller cross the street, and spent hours at Moore's lake. I am in joy for you that you have been active in Thomas Dale Students for Christ. Continue to be a "light" at Virginia Tech. "The baby" is now eighteen.

I love you, Mom.

Nathan,
Even after 9 school systems in 13 years, you have always excelled and never complained. Your willingness to roll with the punches and always meet new challenges head on and come out on top has made us extremely grateful and proud. Your life is already a success and with your strength of character and compassion, life will just get better and better.

Reaching the Summit

By Wendy
Daniel and Sarah
Gregory

A slowly fading sun softly warms the climber's back as he uses the last of his ebbing strength to pull himself to the summit. Peering around at all the budding signs of growth, he drinks in the beauty of the late March evening. The serenity of the moment helps him to regain his breath and to meditate on the huge task he has just accomplished. The adventurer's confidence soars at this thought, and he realizes that nothing but his own fears can keep him from following his dreams. Welcome to the real world, where success is a certainty, but only if you make it so.

Top of the world can mean a more than merely reaching your goals. It means striving farther than you think you can reach, not giving up even in the roughest of times, and never hindering others in their search for personal achievement.
